T's derailment probe hones in on Green Line operator

Investigation. An operator reportedly has a slew of motor vehicle violations on his record.

An investigation into what caused a Green Line trolley to derail Monday afternoon is narrowing in on the actions of the operator, who has been taken off the job as officials examine the circumstances of the accident.

Ten people were injured at 12:20 p.m. Monday — including the driver — when the Riverside-bound D line trolley veered off the tracks, causing another trolley to stop short behind it.

A thorough inspection of the track and signal systems revealed no defects nor anomalies, and preliminary testing found no mechanical issues with the trolley's equipment, according to MBTA Spokeswoman Kelly Smith.

"Investigators continue to take a close look at the performance of the motorperson who was operating the train at the time," Smith said.

Kelly Smith, MBTA spokeswoman tor, local news stations WCVB and CBS Boston identified the driver as 48-year-old Sydley Gardner, a five-year employee with a history of spotty road driving.

According to the reports,

Gardner has a slew of motor vehicle driving infractions in records from the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles. They allegedly include speeding, failure to stop and several license suspensions for failure to make required payments, WCVB reported.

When asked if speed was a factor in the crash, Smith said, "It is certainly among the factors being considered but the investigation continues. No concrete determinations have been made at this time."

"The MBTA is conducting the investigation, which will take as long as is necessary to establish all the facts," she added.

Boston EMS Spokesman Nick Martin said 10 patients were transported following the derailment, "all with relatively minor injuries." MBTA Spokesman Joe Pesaturo said Monday that many victims complained of back pain.

Service on the D and C branches was suspended through Monday evening, though crews were able to restore Green Line service in time for the Tuesday morning commute.

Caught on camera. MBTA seeks six suspects for brawling on the Red Line

In the hope of identifying the assailants, Transit Police on Tuesday released video that shows a group of men and women who were caught on camera pummeling passengers on a Red Line train over the weekend.

Transit Police said the fight broke out around 9 p.m. Sunday following a verbal dispute, as the train neared Broadway MBTA Station.

Three passengers in total were assaulted — one man and two women.

The argument prompted the suspects to attack the original victim, causing two nearby women to intervene. The women had no prior relationship to the first victim, police said, and attempted to persuade the group to stop the beating when the suspects turned on them.

The female suspects are described as white, between 18 and 25 years old. One is blonde and one is brunette. The male suspects are described as white — one in his late teens, two in their 30s, and one in his 40s.

The video, which appears to have been captured by cell phone, is available at Metro.us/Boston.

Anyone with information about the incident can contact Transit Police investigators at 617-222-1050.

his attorney said he is confident the suspect will be exonerated.

According to the Boston Police Department, the victim recognized her alleged attacker as he played basketball on Monday evening. She then contacted authorities, who rushed to the scene and arrested him.

A defense attorney for Ross Currier, 26, of Salem

Street, said in court that his client is an innocent man; a professional who was with his fiancée on the night of the attack.

Currier was released on personal recognizance, and ordered to avoid contact with the victim and wear a GPS bracelet.

At about 1:11 a.m. on Feb. 14, officers responded to the scene of the crime near Unity Street in the North End.

The victim told police that while entering her foyer, a suspect pushed his way in behind her and indecently assaulted her. The victim further reported that the suspect then took a photo with his cellphone and fled the area toward Tileston Street.

Green Lane Project

Boston to get help building protected bike lanes

Boston is one of six U.S. cities selected by national cycling organization PeopleForBikes to participate in a new, intensive two-year program to develop protected bike lanes.

The Green Lane Project works with U.S. cities to speed the installation of protected bike lanes, also known as cycle tracks, around the country. The on-street lanes are separated from traffic by curbs, planters, parked cars or posts, and according to PeopleForBikes, increase bike ridership, particularly among novices.

"Over the next six years, I want to take Boston from one of the best bicycling cities in the country to one of the best in the world. Investing in protected bike lanes is a critical path to that success," Mayor Marty Walsh said.

The six cities were chosen from more than 100 U.S. cities that submitted letters of interest for the program. Other selected cities include Atlanta, Denver, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh and Seattle.

that recycling and food waste receptacles are available in all public spaces, and manufacture and remanufacture products locally. The group also suggests that the city create and fund a reuse coordinator position to help develop and support local reuse businesses and expand donation programs.

"Boston has the opportunity to get into the spotlight nationally and create a world class program," said Alex Papali of the Boston Recycling Coalition and Clean Water Action.

The recommendations follow a series of meetings since June 2013. The task force represents small start-ups, large businesses and institutions, policy experts, environmental advocates, municipal agencies and both current and hopeful future workers.

A group dedicated to getting Boston's waste down to zero in the next 26 years is pleading with the city, "Don't waste this opportunity."

The Boston Zero Waste Task Force released a plan Tuesday that aims to move Boston's overall diversion recycling rate to 50 percent by 2020, 75 percent by 2030, and zero by 2040.

To get there, the city must focus on reducing, reusing, and of course, recycling, according to the group, which is urging the city to extend producer responsibility, implement a ban on single use plastic bags and Styrofoam containers, ensure

Locals compete to see if they have 'The Voice'

Competition. Kristen Merlin and Noah Lis are the latest Bay Staters to compete on NBC's popular show.

For years, Kristen Merlin's name was a frequent sight on signs outside bars and lounges across the South Shore.

Now her name can be seen on TV screens across the country.

Merlin, a Hanson native, is the latest Bay Stater to compete on NBC's singing competition "The Voice." Joining her this season is Noah Lis, a 22-year-old Westfield State University senior from Palmer.

To qualify, the 29-year-old Merlin performed "Something More" by Sugarland. The performance prompted Maroon 5 frontman Adam Levine and singer Shakira to fight for Merlin to be on their teams.

"She's very important to me," Shakira said during Merlin's audition.

Merlin ended up picking Shakira to be her coach and to help her make it through the upcoming competition rounds.

Merlin said she blacked out when her audition started.

"It's nerve-wracking because you have 90 seconds. ... Thank-

Joining the club

Merlin and Lis are far from the only Massachusetts residents to have competed in singing competition shows.

- During the fourth season of "The Voice," Amherst native Michelle Chamuel was the runner-up, making it to the finale.

- James Massone, of Wakefield, was eliminated in the quarterfinals on the second season of "The Voice."

- Former senator Scott Brown's daughter, Ayla Brown, was one of the Top 16 finalists on FOX's "American Idol" in 2006.

fully, I got two of those people to turn around," she said.

Watching herself perform on TV later on was "weird," she said.

"I hate listening to myself," said Merlin, adding that "I was pretty happy with what happened."

While away from the show, Merlin has continued to perform at several establishments in the state. She said her fan base has definitely grown since appearing on TV.

"It's uplifting to know I have such a solid base behind me," she said. "It's awesome to reach a whole new fan base from that one airing."

Lis, who performed Billy Paul's "Me and Mrs. Jones" to win his spot, said in his online biography that his grandfather inspired him to pursue a career in music and he hopes to make his grandfather proud.

Before competing on TV, Merlin said she worked as her own manager and did everything herself. Now that she's appeared on a nationally televised singing competition show, it's a little harder.

"It's overwhelming, but great because I spent so many years knocking down doors to get in and now I'm pleased to have people approaching me to have me play at their venues," she said.

Plane tracked to Strait of Malacca

A U.S. Navy MH-60R Sea Hawk helicopter is taking part in the search for the missing Malaysian airlines plane. / GETTY IMAGES Turnaround. The missing plane was flying above Malaysia's west coast.

Malaysia's military believes a jetliner missing for almost four days turned and flew hundreds of kilometers to the west after it last made contact with civilian air traffic control off the country's east coast, a senior officer told Reuters on Tuesday.

In one of the most baffling mysteries in recent aviation history, a massive search operation for the Malaysia Airlines Boeing 777-200ER has so far found no trace of the aircraft.

Malaysian authorities have previously said flight MH370 disappeared about an hour after it took off from Kuala Lumpur for the Chinese capital Beijing.

"It changed course after Kota Bharu and took a lower altitude. It made it into the Malacca Strait," the senior military officer, who has been briefed on investigations, told Reuters.

That would appear to rule out sudden catastrophic mechanical failure, as it would mean the plane flew approximately 350 miles at least after its last contact with air traffic control, although its transponder and other tracking systems were off.

A non-military source familiar with the investigations said the report was one of several theories and was being checked.

At the time it lost contact with civilian air traffic control, the plane was roughly midway between Malaysia's east coast town of Kota Bharu and the southern tip of Vietnam, flying at 35,000 feet. REUTERS

No leadership

Legal limbo hampers probe into missing jet

Investigators trying to solve the disappearance without a trace of a Malaysia Airlines jetliner face an extremely rare challenge that could hinder their efforts: They lack the powers of a formal air safety investigation.

Four days after Flight MH370 went missing in mid-air, no nation has stepped forward to initiate and lead an official probe, leaving a formal leadership vacuum that industry experts say appears unprecedented.

Malaysian officials are conducting their own informal investigations, in cooperation with other governments and foreign agencies, but they lack the legal powers that would come with a formal international probe under U.N.-sanctioned rules.

Those powers include the legal rights to take testimony from all witnesses and other parties, the right to have exclusive control over the release of information and the ability to centralize a vast amount of fragmentary evidence. REUTERS

Jemaine Clement: What he does 'In the Shadows'

Interview. The "Flight of the Conchords" star is at SXSW as a vampire.

"Flight of the Conchords" star Jemaine Clement is taking on the vampire phenomenon, teaming up with co-director and best friend Taika Waititi for "What We Do in the Shadows," a mockumentary chronicling the daily — or nightly — lives of four everyday undead bloodsuckers living in the city. In Austin, Texas, to promote the film at SXSW, we sat for a conversation with the undead New Zealander.

Were there challenges in constructing a narrative as a documentary?

Yes. And we were also trying to get some action scenes in it, stuff like fights and special effects and let people improvise. But it also frees you up for things. ... We wrote a script, but we didn't show it to any of the actors. Because when people try to act like they're in a documentary, I feel like you can tell.

How much of that original script is the same as what you ended up with?

That's a great question and I don't know. I would be interested to see that, to see how similar they are. But I haven't ever compared them. I haven't looked at the script since.

Were there any vampire elements or clichés you wanted to avoid referencing?

We've got "Twilight" references in it, which I kind of regret. While we were filming it, the last "Twilight" movie was coming out and we wanted to get a shot of them taking down the "Twilight" poster as Nick is getting over being a vampire, saying this vampire trend of the teens has gone again and you have to wait for the next one.

NED EHRLBAR
ned.ehrbar@metro.ju

Q&A: Flight of the Conchords?

How was it co-directing with Taika Waititi?

We're very used to working with each other, and we talked about the idea for so long that we had very similar ideas of how it's going to be. Amazingly we never argued. But when we first started doing theater shows, there were times that I thought we were going to punch each other — even on stage. But those kinds of conflicts have been worked out.

He who must be named

Interview. Ralph Fiennes talks about doing comedy for Wes Anderson in "The Grand Budapest Hotel."

Ralph Fiennes isn't often called to do comedy. It's a shame, as "The Grand Budapest Hotel" proves it's one of his many talents. The latest from Wes Anderson stars Fiennes as an alternately snooty and juvenile concierge accused of murder in the lead-up to World War II. This meant finding a way to strut his stuff with a director famous for meticulous detail.

Apparently Wes Anderson wrote the part for you. How do you handle that when he approaches you for the role? I think the fact that he wrote [the part] for me emerged recently. He said, "When I wrote this I thought of you," but it didn't quite have the pressure of "I'm writing this for you." It's flattering and great, but I still go, "What bit of me did you see?"

His writing is very precise. Is there wiggle room once actors come in? One of the things that I wanted to do with Wes is find out where [the role] would be pitched. I think at first I approached it with too much affectation and an "over-Englishy" slightly forced diction. And he said, "No, no, no, relax that. It should be closer to your voice." I think I knew what he meant. But sometimes he wanted me to push it back again. There's a dial, and sometimes he'd say, "Let's have it more affected," or to make it a little more flamboyant.

What is it that attracts actors to Anderson, especially given how stylized his films are? I think the actors like what the challenge is. You realize quickly that there's a challenge in the delivery of the lines and the rhythm and often it's connected to the camera moves. The challenge is to keep that spirit of likeness and at the same time you got to hit your mark. He wants the actors to invent and to breathe life into what he's written. So he has the choreography mapped out, and all the actors know that. Part of the delight is trying to get it right and keep it seemingly spontaneous.

Q&A

Hitting the books

Anderson made up his own country, but it's inspired by real nations in mid-Europe. Did you do research?

I knew a bit about [WWII-era Europe] from another film I did, called "Sunshine." ... This was completely different. Wes gave me this book ["The World of Yesterday" by Stefan Zweig], which he says in the credits gave him a lot of inspiration for the feeling of this. It's a brilliant book. It's a Viennese-Jewish intellectual that's witnessing the shift to the rise of fascism. A very disturbing, heart-breaking book. That was my required reading. Also, "Beware of Pity," another novel by Stefan Zweig.

'Let your inner glamour-puss go wild'

Decorating tips.

Designer Jonathan Adler helps us channel Holly Golightly.

Jonathan Adler is a busy guy. Besides expanding his burgeoning interiors brand into the world of fashion — including a recent collaboration with Toms — he's opening his 27th boutique, in Boston at The Street in Chestnut Hill. We caught up with the iconic designer to talk home trends, key apartment updates and where to find good vintage in the Hub.

Current trends

"Pantone named Radiant Orchid the color of the year, and they're actually correct. So I'm totally feeling purple. I'm still enjoying emerald and I've never said no to either of those strong colors, tempered with a dash of calming gray," says Adler about the color of the moment. "The truth is we're lucky to live in an era where anything goes, which is fantastic. So the trend is more hyped up eclecticism. 'Love what you love and it will work' is truly what's happening in the world, and I couldn't be happier."

Splurge-worthy home item

"Definitely a chic and comfy sofa," says Adler. "A lot of people settle for a sofa but you shouldn't settle. Buy a sofa that you'll be happy to take with you when you move apartments. It needs to be comfy and couture."

A Jonathan Adler store is opening at 33 Boylston St. / MAURA MCEVOY

Make your entryway special

"An entryway is like the introduction to an essay — it's a microcosm of what people can expect as they enter [your home]. So treat your entryway with care. I believe in making it super special," says Adler. His criteria: "You need a place to put on your shoes, take one last look in the mirror, and throw your keys and mail down when you come home."

A must-have

"You always need an extra lamp. Lighting is under-considered," explains Adler. "Lighting should come from multiple sources: There should be ceiling, wall, floor, table — and all on dimmers. That will make you look more twinkling and glamorous than you think you are."

Quoted

"I'm all about the brass. I make tons of brass objects and I can't get enough."

"Bar carts are essentials," stresses Adler. "You should decorate to look as glamorous as you want to be. Let your inner glamour-puss go wild, and a bar cart is a great place to do that because it announces to the world that you're a little bit louche. And that you entertain. It's announcing that you're Holly Golightly. You need to have a bar cart because it's functional and it sends the right message."

Real estate. Government attempts to replace Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac

The leaders of the U.S. Senate Banking Committee on Tuesday outlined plans for legislation to wind down government-owned mortgage financiers Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac that they said would continue to provide access to long-term, fixed-rate mortgages.

Committee Chairman Tim Johnson, a Democrat, and Sen. Mike Crapo, the panel's top Republican, announced the agreement after working for months to bridge a partisan divide with the hope of moving legislation this year.

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which own or guarantee 60 percent of all U.S. home loans, provide a steady source of mortgage funds by buying loans from lenders and packaging them into securities they sell to investors.

Their central role in housing finance led the government to bail them out to the tune of $187.5 billion when they ran into trouble amid the financial crisis of 2007-2009.

Remember the bad old days of real estate? A new outline may help prevent foreclosure fever from ruining the economy again. / COLOURBOX

Lawmakers from both parties want to revamp the $10 trillion mortgage market to make it less likely taxpayers will ever be put on the hook again.

Under the outline from Johnson and Crapo, private interests would take the first 10 percent of any mortgage losses, before an emergency government backstop would kick in.

"This agreement moves us closer to ending the five-year status quo and beginning the wind down of Fannie and Freddie, while protecting taxpayers with strong private capital," Crapo said in a statement.

Outline of the outline

'Reform is necessary'

Under the proposal, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would be wound down and replaced with a new government reinsurer called the Federal Mortgage Insurance Corp., which would only provide assistance after private creditors had taken a hit. The entity would be financed by fees on lenders who want the government backstop.

Included in the outline is a mandate that strong underwriting standards be built into the new system.

"There is near unanimous agreement that our current housing finance system is not sustainable in the long term and reform is necessary to help strengthen and stabilize the economy," said Johnson. "This bipartisan effort will provide the market the certainty it needs, while preserving fair and affordable housing throughout the country."

GET LOST IN A ROAMING APP CO-CREATED BY RADIOHEAD

Polyfauna

Price: Free

Platforms: iOS and Android
Radiohead gave the option to buy their last two albums for any price. Now they have a free app. We're not sure how the band makes money, except that they don't really need to ever again.

Created with design firm Universal Everything, Polyfauna is an experimental app. How experimental? It doesn't come with instructions. It's like the old computer game "Myst," which also allows you to explore faintly alien, magical worlds. There's no mission apart from discovering all it has to offer, which you do by shifting and tilting your phone, pointing it in certain

Interact with strange worlds in the Radiohead app Polyfauna. / PROVIDED

App Appeal

MATT PRIGGE

directions (while looking to onlookers like you've lost all faculties).

There is one instruction: "Follow the [floating red dot]." Doing so (if you can find and successfully woo it) sends you into new mini-worlds, offering fresh, pleasingly low-res landscapes with trees and mountains, speckled with rain and looming debris. You can doodle on the screen. The app allows you to do whatever you like, provided you're into a meditative time-suck that plays soundscapes taken from sessions for Radiohead's last album, "The King of Limbs."

Polyfauna is pure texture, with little but mind-clearing escape. It essentially just is, and for a band who no longer have anything to prove, that's a step in the right direction.

Cyber cooking. IBM's Watson evolves from trivia master to chef

In another move toward our eventual enslavement by robots, computers can now whip up delicious culinary delights. IBM's Watson, who conquered the world of game shows with a standout performance on "Jeopardy!", has turned its cold, unfeeling eye to the culinary arts.

Scientists created a tasteful algorithm that allows Watson to put innovative spins on food from around the globe. So far it has created ceviche fish and chips and Vietnamese apple kebabs, among others. Researchers say Watson designs recipes lowly human chefs haven't thought of by analyzing ingredients on a molecular level. And it's not just speculative food science. IBM set up a food truck in Austin, Texas, to show off the computer-generated grub as part of SXSW, open until Tuesday.

Colorectal cancer: What you do now could save your life

Start early. Genetic sequencing is the treatment of the future, but prevention is best.

When it comes to colorectal cancer — which comprises colon cancer and rectal cancer — not all tumors are created equal. As with new developments in cancer research in general, the big news in treatment is genetic sequencing: defining the biology of a tumor and tailoring targeted treatment, rather than the old one-pill-fits-all approach.

"Precision medicine is the buzzword," says Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center's Dr. Rona Yaeger, a colorectal cancer researcher with the American Cancer Society. "Already there are new drugs in clinical trials that will come on the market soon."

With precision medicine and improved surgery techniques, doctors are able to more accurately target tumors. The result is less treatment for colorectal cancer patients.

"We're now understanding that we've been overtreating, and we don't always need all that chemotherapy and radiation," explains Yaeger. "Radiation in particular is something we want to avoid if possible, especially in young people, because one of the possible side effects is infertility."

Young people? Colorectal cancer is often thought of as an older person's disease. Yaeger says that the average age of colorectal cancer patients is 70, but that the incidence of colon cancer is increasing in those 25-50.

"That's what we're seeing," she says.

"The problem is that in younger people, colorectal cancer is more likely to be advanced. Young people do not seek treatment until they present with symptoms, such as bloody stool or a change in bowel movement. With young people, it's beyond a polyp."

Polyps are pre-cancerous ruptures in the bowel wall that are detected in the course of colonoscopy exams and simply removed. Colonoscopies — during which patients are asleep and can head home that same day — are an effective tool in preventing cancer. They're usually given at age 50 or above, unless there's family history of colorectal cancer. "It's still our best tool for preventing fatalities overall," says Yaeger.

Despite treatment advances, prevention is still key for anyone. Two ways to slash your risk? You've heard them before: a healthy (specifically high-fiber) diet and regular exercise.

"A large BMI is known to affect all cancers," says Yaeger.

Potential HIV prevention drug fares well

Location of study: U.S.

Study subjects: Rhesus macaques monkeys

Results: A new drug in development to prevent HIV showed promising results in a recent animal study. The drug at the center of the research blocks replication of the virus by inhibiting a viral enzyme from inserting DNA into chromosomes. The animal study investigated the drug's protective effect in monkeys using a virus resembling HIV. "We treated the rhesus macaques with the drug then challenged the animals repeatedly with the virus to see if they'd get infected," said Dr. Martin Markowitz, co-investigator and clinical director at the Aaron Diamond AIDS Research Center. "The treated monkeys did not get infected, while the untreated ones did." In fact, all of the drug-treated monkeys remained virus-free.

Significance: Researchers say the data provides them with enough rationale to move forward with initial safety testing in humans. Developed by GlaxoSmithKline, the drug will soon be tested in sexually active men who are at low risk for HIV infection. Researchers hope to test the drug among high-risk individuals thereafter. The drug has the potential to prevent HIV via a shot administered every three months.

Allergies equally prevalent throughout US

Location of study: U.S.
Study subjects: Approximately

10,000 Americans from 2005-2006
Results: A comprehensive new study has found that allergy prevalence is relatively the same throughout different U.S. regions. The only exception, according to researchers from the National Institutes of Health, is in children 5 and younger. "People who are prone to develop allergies tend to become allergic to whatever is in their environment," said Dr. Paivi Salo, an epidemiologist with the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences. In other words, it's what triggers an allergic reaction that varies throughout different regions. Outdoor allergies were more common in the West, while indoor allergies were more prevalent in the South. Sensitization to food allergies was highest in the South, as were sensitivities to cockroaches and dust mites.
Significance: The study represents the largest look at allergy prevalence from childhood through old age.

Horoscope

Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20.
Your love life will get a boost. A recent accomplishment may tempt you to take on more projects. Focusing on too many things at once will be counter-productive.

Aries | March 21-April 20.
Look for a career-changing opportunity today. Your abilities and personality will catch someone's attention. Be honest and don't underestimate what you have to offer.

Taurus | April 21-May 21.
Avoid making hasty decisions. Take time to weigh all the pros and cons. You will have problems if you go rushing ahead without considering the consequences.

Gemini | May 22-June 20.
Your unique talents make you who you are. Don't be afraid to stand out in the crowd. Express your thoughts, and press on until you reach your goals.

Cancer | June 21-July 22.
Be cognizant of professional opportunities that come your way. Review any leads or details personally. Someone in the background may be trying to feed you false information.

Leo | July 23-Aug. 22.
You're in a high cycle, so take advantage of any opportunity to express your likes or dislikes. A change of scenery will add a spark to a relationship.

Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22.
A stressful money matter can be resolved. Don't feel torn between problems at work and issues at home. Trust your judgment.

Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22.
You may not realize it, but communication and networking will pave the way for future alliances. Continue plans to advance your education.

Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21.
Take the time you need to gather your thoughts. Refuse to let anyone entice you into revealing your plans. Keep a low profile in order to avoid criticism and interference.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. There is a whirlwind of activity around you. You may be asked to make a quick financial decision. Don't feel that you have to participate in a joint venture.

Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan 20.
Learn to be selective in your confidants. A private comment may be repeated. Speaking out too freely may cause difficulties between you and your partner.

Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb 18.
Don't allow anyone or anything to impede your progress. Stay firm and in control of any situation you face. A well-meaning acquaintance could inadvertently delay your plans.

New SAT plan adumbrates failure

Re: 'Switching up the SAT' (Metro, March 10) Metro informs us that difficult words like adumbrate, legerdemain and obstreperous are being eliminated from SAT tests. One educator says that passages from The Declaration of Independence and the Federalist Papers are more suited for the test-takers. But what happens when those test-takers run into words such as usurpation, magnanimity, consanguinity, obsequious or assiduity, all of which can be found in those documents? Will they then reach for their copies of "The Declaration of Independence for Dummies" and "The Federalist Papers for Dummies"?

Not cool, MBTA

Re: 'New Yawkey station debuts with increased service plan' (Metro, March 10) I think you should do some further research on this new schedule and the satisfaction of its customers. Today, the first day of the new schedule, our train was a half an hour late. There is no one from the Natick stop who is happy about this new schedule, because the MBTA has completely eliminated the express home and told us to drive to Ashland if we wanted an express train — why would I do that? NBA power rankings | by James Toscano

Clippers (45-20)

The Suns' P.J. Tucker swung at Blake Griffin Monday night and it's symbolic of what the Clips are going to get from here on out. Teams across the league are going to go down swinging against what could now be the best team in the NBA. Having Chris Paul healthy has helped, just a tad.

No. 4

Spurs (46-16)

Year after year the Spurs laugh in the face of their doubters. As of Tuesday, they lead one of the strongest Western Conferences in years.

No. 5

Pacers (46-17)

Yikes. The Pacers are playing their worst basketball of the season, having lost four games in a row (three by double-digits).

No. 6

Thunder (46-17)

Gerald Green dropped 41 on the Thunder last Thursday and Jodie Meeks dropped 42 on them Sunday.

No. 7

Blazers (42-21)

Up 13 points on the Rockets with 7:31 to play, the Blazers let Houston go on a 12-1 run and lost. They'll be kicking themselves for awhile.

No. 8

Warriors (40-24)

Stephen Curry has a strained right quad and although it won't keep him out of games, it will limit him a bit.

No. 9

Mavericks (38-26)

Perhaps we didn't have enough faith in Dallas to hang onto a playoff spot. Wins over Portland and Indiana were impressive.

No. 10

Grizzlies (36-26)

It's been a hard-fought battle this season for the Griz, but that's their M.O. Now they're a legit contender with a handful of easy games coming up.

No. 11

Suns (36-27)

Uh oh. The Suns are slipping right out of the playoff picture. Memphis has just passed them.

No. 12

Bulls (35-28)

Joakim Noah is a beast, and no, that's not a shot at his looks. He's championship driven, even though a title is highly unlikely in Chicago.

No. 13

Raptors (35-27)

Chicago, Washington and Brooklyn could finally bump the Raptors from both the No. 3 and No. 4 seeds.

No. 14

Wizards (33-30)

The Wizards are 8-2 over their last 10 games, which is the best record over that stretch in the East. They're without Nene right now, too.

No. 15

Nets (32-30)

Brooklyn is 6-1 since getting its butt kicked by the Blazers. This is a team that kinda, sorta, finally is worth taking seriously in the East.

No. 16

Bobcats (30-34)

The Nets are pulling away from the No. 7 seed and leaving the Bobcats to either play the Heat or Pacers in the first round.

No. 17

T'Wolves (31-31)

This offseason has become far more important and interesting for Minnesota than this already lost regular season. The Kevin Love watch is on.

No. 18

Pelicans (26-37)

Three straight wins for the Pelicans. Check out Anthony Davis' line in each win: 28 and 15, 29 and 14, 32 and 17.

NHL injury

Former Bruins center Peverley recovering

Former Bruins center and current Dallas Star Rich Peverley underwent tests at UT Southwestern St. Paul Hospital Tuesday following a frightening incident in Monday night's Blue Jackets-Stars game in Dallas. Peverley collapsed on the Stars bench in the first period after suffering what was described as a "cardiac event."

Stars general manager Jim Nill told ESPN Dallas.com that Peverley "has been communicating with his friends and teammates and is 'extremely grateful for all of the prayers and support.'"

"The focus of all the testing and monitoring is being dedicated to finding the cause of the event and a long-term solution to rectify the problem," Nill told ESPN.

Peverley was operated on prior to the start of the 2013-14 season to repair an irregular heartbeat.

The incident Monday night became so serious that the Blue Jackets and Stars game was postponed.

"When he dropped it was red alert," Stars head coach Lindy Ruff told reporters. METRO

Marquee matchup

New-look Habs host Bruins

The Bruins were said to have been highly interested in acquiring forward Thomas Vanek at the trade deadline last week, but the dynamic wing found his way to Boston's rival in Montreal instead. The Canadiens are 2-0 against the B's this season and Vanek will get his first taste of the rivalry Wednesday (7:30 p.m., NBCSN).

Edelman will test waters of free agency

NFL. The Patriots will now have to scratch and claw if they want to keep their leading receiver from 2013.

The Patriots reportedly gave Julian Edelman a 4 p.m. deadline Tuesday to re-sign, but the slot receiver didn't wait that long to break the news that he will test the free agent waters.

ESPN's Adam Schefter reported just prior to 2:30 p.m. Tuesday that Edelman and

In addition to the 105 receptions and 1,056 yards of receiving Julian Edelman produced in 2013 for the Patriots, he also returned punts and racked up 374 yards in that area.

the Patriots were unable to reach a deal. This does not mean that Edelman is officially done in New England. However, now the Patriots have serious competition if they intend to keep their leading receiver from 2013.

NFL.com's Ian Rapoport reported that the Patriots had offered Edelman a three-year contract Tuesday but Edelman was apparently seeking more years, more cash or both.

Edelman outperformed the Pats' big free agent signing of last spring, Danny Amendola, by catching a career-high 105 balls for 1,056 yards last season. The former quarterback out of Kent State also produced 374 yards of punt return yardage in 2013.

The Pats re-signed Edelman last April, after much of that year's free agency dust had cleared, to a one-year deal.
